

Amgen Scholars Program

Columbia University and Barnard College are excited to host the Amgen Scholars Program. The Amgen Scholars Program provides hundreds of undergraduate students with the opportunity to engage in a hands-on summer research experience at some of the world's leading institutions. The program aims to increase learning and networking opportunities for undergraduate students committed to pursuing science or engineering careers. One unique component of the program is the opportunity to attend the U.S. symposium in Los Angeles, where students can meet their peers from across the nation, network with scientists and learn about science careers in industry and academia.

Applications are now available for all ten host universities, and you are encouraged to visit www.amgenscholars.com if you are interested in learning more about the program details and eligibility requirements. The application deadline for all U.S. host universities is February 1, 2011 with the exception of the California Institute of Technology, for which the deadline is February 15, 2011. The Columbia University/Barnard College program takes place between May 31st and August 5th 2011.
